

WINTER STORMS APPROACHING.....

The horrifying rainstorm on December 4th was a sight to behold. My colleague and I watched as the relentless downpour seemed endless, drenching everything in its path. As I made my way through the streets, I saw so many people in need. Their soaked coats offering little protection from the elements. The pounding of the rain on them and the glistening pavement painted a disquieting scene.

Despite the chaos of the storm, the church had provided sandwiches, which was so welcoming. Together with other food, all the warm winter coats and support, we were able to give to those who were most affected. It was heartwarming to witness the selfless acts of kindness and comfort that the homeless people shared amongst themselves. The shock and desperation in people's eyes reflected the severity of the situation, but amidst it all, there was an unwavering sense of hope and resilience.

As I stood in the rain, offering whatever help I could, I couldn't help but feel a deep connection to those around me. We were all soaked to the bone, but our spirits remained unbroken. Together, we tried to bring a glimmer of hope to those affected by the storm, knowing that the strength of our collective efforts would make a difference in this challenging time.

In the face of such adversity, the human spirit prevailed, showing compassion, solidarity, and the unwavering determination to provide for one another. Despite the frightening nature of the storm, it was heartening to see the homeless community come together, offering what we brought as well as sharing hope amidst the turmoil.

Something I will never forget.

You can find love in the most darkest places.
